The opportunity to do business or invest in Nigeria:

Notwithstanding a seemingly adverse business climate, Nigeria remains an investor's delight! Often touted as Africa's largest economy and the most populous African country (over 170 million people), Nigeria is a middle-income, mixed economy and emerging market, with expanding financial, service, communications, technology, entertainment and a vibrant retail sector, among others. The manufacturing and retail sectors, although currently underachieving, are amongst the largest on the continent, and produces a large proportion of goods and services for the West African region, making it a busy hub for business activities. The country has the potential to become one of the largest economies in the world sooner than expected.

The opportunities, risks and incentives for investing in Nigeria are well documented. Opportunities abound in real estate, retail market, construction, refinery projects, mining, manufacturing, services, education, healthcare, and agriculture, among others. One thing is certain; the country is poised for economic and social development.

Today, the Nigerian economy is a rich fallow-ground of opportunities for bold, smart and visionary entrepreneurs and courageous investors to key into as the country seeks to achieve economic prosperity by maximizing her productive capacity.

Investing in Nigeria's infrastructure for development – State Governments in Nigeria are very keen to partner with credible British European and other overseas investors in order to establish infrastructures that will help unlock the economy and capitalize on the opportunities inherent in their vast raw materials and resource base. These include roads construction, power generation, high profile retail shopping centres, solid minerals, agricultural resources, human capital, etc. which Nigeria has in abundance (commercial) quantities across well diversified geographical locations.

Agricultural Investment– The strong determination of Nigeria’s federal government to diversify the economy and drastically reduce its historically high exposure to shocks in the global oil market has seen it embark on an Agricultural Transformation Agenda. The government is showing its commitment to this agenda through its policies and strong efforts to promote investment in the infrastructure required to boost what is regarded as the country’s primary sector. With increased agricultural output, Nigeria can cut back on its food imports which add up to an expenditure of $45bn annually.

Retail Opportunities – Retailing in Nigeria is expanding on the back of the vast and rising size of the Nigerian populace, especially among the middle class and young urban population. The strongest growth is currently being observed in non-store retailing through handheld electronic devices, spurred on by the government’s policies encouraging cashless spending, although this remains a small channel.

While retailing in Nigeria is still dominated by old-fashioned channels such as open markets, the increasing presence of local and international convenience stores and retail supermarket chains such as ShopRite is gradually changing the setting. New outlets are also expected to continue to expand in this space.
